

Fancy-Pants Camps

MAINE TRAVEL

By Virginia M. Wright on Apr 17, 2018

Photographs Courtesy of Sandy Pines, Tops'l Farm, Seguin

Sometimes even the heartiest outdoorsperson wants to sleep outside without the backache of tenting it. And is the occasional heated pool too much to ask? These three spots are taking camping in Maine to the next level.

Seguin

Georgetown. 857-523-0813.

The shelter: Three elevated houses (one with a cedar hot tub) tucked among the tree canopies on a hillside above the Back River. Each dwelling has a kitchen, bathroom, screened porch, and deck, housed in a series of pavilions connected by rope bridges.

Rates: $169–$299/night.

The site: 21 wooded acres, with sublime views of the tidal Back River as it winds through marshlands to the Kennebec River and the sea.

Gentling it: Co-owner Marsha Dunn wanted a fluid connection between interior and exterior spaces, so she's kept furnishings simple and creative (think thick headboards that double as small closets). "The minimalist décor and colors enhance the feeling of harmony with the surroundings," she says.